Target Audience

This course is designed for practitioners involved in or responsible for design, operations, or management of traffic signals including State/MPOs/Local Government personnel and consultants and contractors.

Course Description

This two-day course will help build technical expertise in signal timing by focusing on the relationship between network context and operational objectives to inform the design of signal timing parameters. The course will expand on the traditional signal timing process by incorporating an objectives and performance driven approach that leads to selection of appropriate computational methods for design and operation of traffic signal timing.

This is a highly interactive training, please bring a calculator and writing implements to class.

NHI 133121 Traffic Signal Design and Operation is recommended but not required.
